

Management of personal data in the Open Access Indicator

Danish Agency for Higher Education and Science (hereafter the agency) processes personal data in connection with the Open Access Indicator (hereafter: OAI). The OAI is used annually to calculate how many publications from Danish research institutions are Open Access. This means that as part of its management and operation of OAI, the agency may receive identifiable personal data concerning individuals.

Purpose and legal basis for processing personal data

The purpose of processing personal data is to be able to give the public easy access to following the development of Open Access at Danish universities. Open Access aims to provide access to scientific knowledge by all of society. The legal basis for processing personal data in connection with OAI is the General Data Protection Regulation Article 6 (1) (e), which states that the agency can lawfully process standard personal data when the processing is necessary to the completion of the tasks carried out in the exercise of the official authority vested in the agency, or if the processing is necessary to the completion of a task in the public interest.

Securing progress in accessing scientific knowledge for all via the OAI is in the interest of society. The operation and development of activities that can promote Open Access projects to publications, data and analyses also fall within the scope of the agency, cf. National Budget 2017, §19.46.02.11.

Categories of registered individuals

The agency processes already published personal data about research employees at Danish universities.

Categories of personal data

The agency only processes standard information, e.g. name, place of work, information about and links to publications in the Danish Research Database, BFI classification and realised/untapped/unclear Open Access Potential.

Forwarding personal data

The agency does not forward personal data.

Where does personal data originate?

The data originates from the systems of Danish research- and educational institutions, journal data from The Directory of Open Access Journal's database (DOAJ), journal data from the Sherpa/Romeo database and repository data from a list of journals with particularly long embargo periods.

Storage of personal data

Personal data is stored for varied lengths of time depending on the lifetime of the OAI. However, personal data is deleted as early as possible, without jeopardising the aim of the OAI.

General information

The agency processes personal data in accordance with the General Data Protection Regulation (Regulation (EU) 2016/679 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 April 2016 on the protection of natural persons with regard to the processing of personal data and on the free movement of such data, etc.) and the Data Protection Act (Act no. 502 of 23 May 2018 on the Supplementary Provisions to the Regulation on the Protection of Individuals with regard to the Processing of Personal Data and on the Free Exchange of Such Information).

Your rights

If your personal data is processed by the agency, you have several rights, as described below. If you wish to avail of those rights, besides the obligation to inform, you must contact the agency. The agency can provide you with more information on your rights.

Read more about your rights here:

Obligation to inform

In many cases, the agency must provide you with information, when it collects or processes your personal data.

Right to see information (right of access)

You have the right to request access regarding the processing of your data. This means that you have the right to know, if the agency is processing your personal data and to see the data. However, there are certain exemptions to this right.

Right to rectify (correction)

The agency must process data correctly and update data. If it turns out that the agency has not processed the correct data for you, you have the right to rectify.

Right to deletion

In certain cases, you have the right to have your personal data deleted before the agency automatically deletes it.

Right to limited processing

In some cases, you have the right to limit the processing of your personal data. If you have the right to limit the processing of your data, then the agency is only allowed to process your data with your consent, except when it concerns storage, or with the intent to establish, uphold or defend a legal claim or to protect a person or important interests of society.

Right to object

In some cases, you have the right to make objections to the agency's otherwise legal processing of your personal data.

Right to transmit data (data portability)

In some cases, you have the right to receive your personal data in a structured and commonly used format, which is machine-readable, as well as to have your personal data transferred from one data controller to another without hindrance. Please note however, that the right in most cases will not apply to the processing of personal data by public authorities, including the agency.

You can read more about your rights in the Data Protection Agency's handbook on the rights of the registered at: www.datatilsynet.dk
